

Looking at one of the many enemy armaments in one of the world's most unusual museums is Lt. Millard Vanderbilt. He is touring the Combined Republic of Vietnam Armed Forces/United States Material Exploitation Center museum in Saigon. The museum is chock full of Vietcong and North Vietnamese weapons, in most cases supplied, not always voluntarily, by the enemy. This is a 122mm rocket launcher, with rocket. Other displays feature booby traps and other kinds of launchers and guns.

Ex-Army Footballers Aid Combat Mission

SOUTHEAST ASIA — Twenty-three years ago, three Nakhon Phanom RTAFB colonels combined athletic talents for a common goal — an undefeated, untied U.S. Military Academy football season.

Today, the same three are working together in support of the Air Force's combat mission in Southeast Asia.

The three, who once wore pigskin togs for the "Black Knights" of the Hudson, are: Col. Robert E. Wayne, Task Force Alpha (TFA) commander; Irving B. Reed, 56th Special Operations Wing vice commander, and Lou E. Bretzke, 56th Special Operations Wing assistant director of operations.

Back during the glorious era of 1944-48 when All-Americans Doc Blanchard and Glenn Davis were monopolizing the sports pages, Colonel Wayne held the second-string varsity slot (1944 and 1945). The Cadets went undefeated all three years.

A few years later, Colonel Wayne returned to West Point grid wars as an assistant football coach. During the 1948 and 1949 gridiron campaigns, he scouted future Army opponents and helped map out defensive and offensive strategy.

While the Task Force Alpha commander coached, Colonels Reed and Bretzke garnered their share of headlines in the 1948-1950 campaigns with Colonel Reed carving his niche as a defensive halfback and Colonel Bretzke alternating between center and linebacker.

West Point posted undefeated seasons in 1948 and 1949. In the 1948 campaign, the Black Knights went through a perfect season, but climaxed the year with a 21-point tie with arch-rival Navy.

The following year, Army notched an unblemished slate.
