

Operation Homecoming

In 1972-73, I was a young Air Force officer stationed at Clark Air Base in the Philippines. It was one of the largest bases in the world, and was near the combat areas of Southeast Asia.

In early 1973, the United States and North VietNam reached an agreement which brought our prisoners of war home. Being part of the crowds who welcomed the men back was one of the most moving experiences of my life, and I'd like to share it with you.

My thanks to Larry Chesley, Lt. Col. USAF Retired, one of those who came home, for allowing me to quote liberally from his book, "Seven Years in Hanoi".

Thanks also to those who have commented on the earlier version of this page for allowing me to include their comments here. They have added much to my story and understanding of this event.

The images are courtesy of the U.S. Air Force.

These are C-141 aircraft, the workhorse of the airlift fleet. They can be configured as medical evacuation aircraft, including litters for more seriously ill patients. Specially trained flight nurses, and sometimes doctors, serve on these special aircraft. Here, several C-141s are lined up at Clark, waiting for the order to fly to Hanoi to bring our men home. The red crosses on their tails indicate their mission.

No, that is not Mount Pinatubo, the famous volcano; it's Mount Arayat!

Barry Crocker, a young man in aircraft maintenance at Clark during Homecoming, put the red cross on the tail of the first aircraft. He remembers running around the base trying to find red tape that would be strong enough to stay on, but he said the crosses were finally painted on. Barry also was a member of the block crew for the first airplane when it returned from Hanoi and he still feels the honor!

That first C-141 is still flying and has become something of a memorial.
